History was made on June 6, 2015, when a muscled bay colt rolled out of the far turn and squared his shoulders to let his rider, Victor Espinoza, stare down the long, withering stretch of Belmont Park. A sense of inevitability surged through the mammoth old grandstand as the fans in the capacity crowd strained on the tips of their toes before letting out a roar from deep in their souls. The 37-year search for a Triple Crown winner was over. His name was American Pharoah. The colt affirmed the prophecy of Frances Relihan, an Irish horsewoman who cared for him as a baby in the bluegrass of Kentucky where dreamers and schemers match wits and pedigrees in the pursuit of building a perfect racehorse. She was the first to recognize the spirit of a champion in him. American Pharoah brought redemption to his flamboyant owner, Ahmed Zayat, whose stable was bankrupt and honor publicly questioned before the colt came along and restored his fortune and reputation. The rare talent forced his Hall of Fame trainer Bob Baffert to take stock of a life and career that was notorious for its controversies as his many successes in a way that a recent near-fatal heart attack and the deaths of his parents had not. Finally, for his jockey Espinoza, a generous and sensitive soul who perhaps appreciated the coltmost, American Pharoah galloped him into the history books. From American Pharoah's modest beginnings in the Bluegrass State to his ultimate triumph in the Empire State, Joe Drape explores how the battered, old sport of horse racing found an immortal Thoroughbred, one worthy to stand alongside Sir Barton and Assault, War Admiral and Whirlaway, Citation and Secretariat, as only the 12th Triple Crown champion in history. Drape chronicles how a gifted horse named American Pharoah dropped in the laps of a group of very human horse people and, as he ran to glory, taught them all humility. --This text refers to the Audio CD edition.
