Antonia Cunningham was educated at England's Cambridge University, where she studied Languages and Art History. Following a short stint as a school tutor, she turned her hand to publishing, where she found her way into travel editing and writing. She has written several books, including non-fiction for children, two books on world art and the Impressionists, and five on Copenhagen and Denmark, including Insight's Smart Guide Copenhagen. Every time she visits this friendly, walkable city she finds something new and is always charmed by it. She lives in London with her partner Nick and son Benjamin, to both of whom she dedicates this book. Fran Parnell's passion for Scandinavia began while studying Anglo-Saxon, Norse and Celtic at Cambridge University. She travels regularly in the region, and has written guides to Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Sweden. She loves Iron Age and Viking history, and is currently attempting to run a marathon in each Scandinavian capital.

This is one of the worst guides I have ever used. The maps are incorrect and the guide is badly out of date. The Design Center described on page 72 as having "exhibitions on cutting edge design" stopped having exhibitions more than two years ago. One of the "food and drink" places described on page 34 was gutted for remodeling some time ago. The map of the Slotsholmen on page 76 sends you on a long uninteresting walk when there is an easy shortcut. If you need a guide to Copenhagen, I strongly recommend that you look elsewhere.

index was poorly laid out. no shopping suggestions. poorly laid out maps. Poor suggestions for restaurants. Book was difficult to use

I have been able to map out the sites we want to see in an orderly fashion instead of getting there and wandering around wondering what to go see next. A great time saver!
